HONGKONG, FIBRUARY 2nd, 1880. THE extreme jealousy with which Russia watches English movements in Asia, and the Far East especially, is well illustrated by some recent remarks that have appeared in the St. Petersburg News. This journal has heen directing attention to what it is pleased to call the growth of English influence in Japan, and says that English engineers "occupy an eminent position on the island of Yesso in the neighbourhood of Russian and a large interest in the prosperity of the Club, Saghalien, where they are building a railway, after having founded many factories. Having obtained Saghalien, Russia boped, no doubt, at no distant date, to find a pretext for the annexation of Yasso, when the gradual absorption of Japan would become possible. The eyes of the Japanese Ministers have perhaps been opened to the danger by English officials. This, at events, would seem to be the idea of the St. Petersburg News, when it observes that it is high time "that Russia should direct her attention to the danger, and endeavoir betimes to oppose this constant encroachment of the English element, which proves hostile to Russian interests everywhere throughout the world." The close of this sentence is certainly the truest statement made by the Russian print.
